Margaret Tory and her best friend Maizon do everything together.

They even live on the same block      in Brooklyn, New York.

But the summer they turn eleven,      things change.

Margaret's father passes away      and Maizon is offered a scholarship to a boarding school in Connecticut.

Now Margaret has to cope      with her friend going away.

"Sure wish you weren't going away," Margaret said, choking back tears for what seemed like the millionth time.

They were sitting on the M train,      crossing the Williamsburg Bridge, and Margaret shivered as the train passed over the water.

The L train would have made the trip easier      but the L didn't go over the bridge and Maizon had wanted to ride over it      once more before she left.
